

From the Managing Directors

We are now in an economic world in which quickness, avoidance of errors, utilization of all opportunities within the company and many other factors are essential to ensure economic success. Many tasks require working in a team in the form of a project. When the nature of the task is complex, there is practically no other procedure possible. Looking at problems within a particular order requires the interdisciplinary, systematic and highly efficient strategic cooperation of many employees. With this primer we want to show how we and our employees approach problems, solve them, and serve the market.

Project management in our company is not a new thing. How else would we have been able to achieve important successes in the past?

Today it is important to prepare collected knowledge and experience so that it can be utilized to the best advantage by every employee involved in project execution. New employees should also profit from this, so that they will be in the position to take action efficiently as quickly as possible in value-added activities. Experienced project managers will recognize that their knowledge and experience are being confirmed.

Our common aim will and must be viewed as the continuing improvement of project management. All employees, including the management, can make a contribution in this regard.

We look forward to the greatest success in our collaborations.

Dr. Dieter Fischer

Rudolf Bock

Peter Konieczny

Würzburg, January 1998